Data Security for devices on the move.

Sophia Antipolis software publisher MobileGov has signed a strategic partnership with the City of Cannes DSIT – (Direction des Systèmes d'Information et des Télécommunications). MobileGov will provide the conference capital of the Côte d'Azur with a system to protect unauthorized peripheral devices from accessing the city government's sensitive data.

MobileGov (which stands for "Mobile Electronic Government") leads its competition in this technology, which extends security on information networks to detachable and mobile peripheral devices. The company was voted "Best Innovation" by Capital – IT Paris in 2005 and named "FCPI Innovative Company" by OSEO – ANVAR. MobileGov is the product of 18 months of R&D, and has filed an international patent on its revolutionary technology. With 70% of information and data thefts originating within organizations, the technology has a strong future.

This agreement will enable MobileGov to test its technology under real conditions with the customer's full participation. According to Didier Vescovi, Director of DSIT for the City of Cannes, "We are in full revision of our general security policy, thus this system allows us to better address our duty to protect the sensitive data that a city must manage. This experiment also allows us to evolve the MobileGov application according to our specific needs." MobileGov is now negotiating agreements with other European cities, as well.
